Controversy May Be Ahead for First State-wide Testing Program

ATI Princeton's fourth-graders and high school seniors will join more than 200,000 other New Jersey public school students early this fall in the first state-wide testing program.

Tests will be given to all 4th and 12th grades on two consecutive days, probably in late October. Dates haven't yet been chosen.

Both grades will have tests in English and in math which will take four hours of testing and administrative time. They will be given by classroom teachers, which is somewhat ironical since the teachers' professional organization, the New Jersey Education Association, doesn't approve of the program.

"We are definitely not trying to standardize all New Jersey pupils from Cape May to Englewood in one big mold," emphasizes Gordon Ascher, director of Educational Assessment for the Department of Education, and he stresses also that the state isn't interested in passing judgment, either on a school district or on the way teachers do their job.

Dr. Ascher's office will assemble, besides test scores, what educators call "correlates" for achievement. These are factors like the median income in a school district, the teacher-pupil ratio and the amount of money a district spends for each pupil.

"That way," Dr. Ascher explains, "a district can look at test scores and ask, 'How well SHOULD we have scored, given our assets and labilities?' This information just isn't available now."

Data will also help a school district decide how to spend its money. Which would help students more—a remedial reading specialist or smaller classes? Should the district buy more library books or provide more money for field trips?

Also, Dr. Ascher's office will be able, with scores in hand, to group similar districts—suburban, nural.

highly urban, Norms can be developed for various units of size from the county right down to the individual classroom. And, of course, the office will develop norms for the state as a whole,

"Grouping similar districts," Dr. Ascher points out, "can be very helpful. For example, if one district is unusually successful, we can ask them how they do it, and pass along their techniques to districts that are similar, but for some reason aren't doing so well, Right now, there is no way one district can help another in that way."

State-wide testing like this is brand new for New Jersey and it received its impetus from several sources.

Belief in the Future

Football Ahead. The sports program, an agonizing problem last year for everybody at the high school, will proceed as usual.

"We're on," says Florence Burke, assistant principal, in commenting on the coming season, "It's business-as-usual for football."

"Coaches have been turning in sports guidelines for all sports, and they seem workable and sensible," Dr. Werthelmer reports geat response to this newborns, and they seem workable and sensible," Dr. Werthelmer dds.

The Learning Community of 200 students, will move into its second year, operating out of a base at John Witherspoon of School, across the street from the high school.

"We made a fairly extensive evaluation of the Community in the spring," Dr. Wertheimer explains. "Parents got questionnaires, teachers outside the Community weachers have spent the summer working on the data."

And Now. What of the future? The past year was a troubled one for the school in many ways.

School Population of 4,412 Forecast

School Population

True to the predictions of the long-range report, Princeton's school population is gradually growing smaller.

This September, the schools expect about 4,412 students. (Of this number, 1,750 will be in the high school, 925 in the Middle School and the rest in the four elementary schools.)

Last September, the entering figure was 4,518. It declined to 4,498 in April and had taken a sharp dive to 4,442 by the end of the school year this June.

Two years ago, in September of 1970, the entering population was 4,642, with a drop to 4,590 by the June of that school year.

In 1973, the population will really fall off. That's when West Windsor - Plainsboro will withdraw its first 300 high school pupils.

The population decline is across-the-board; kindergartens are down; elementary schools, except for River side, are down; in the Middle School, Valley R o a d dropped seven and Community Park 15.

Of The Town AGENDA LIGHT For School Board. It looks like a light, vacation-style agenda for the Princeton Regional School Board which will meet next Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Community Park for the first public meeting in two and one-half months. A five-cent increase in the cost of school lunches is probably the item of most interest to parents. The board will act to increase the cost for elementary school children to 45 and for Middle School and High School children to 59. The board will also take up the question of student frees.

Sister Janice arrived in Princeton on Sunday and by Tuesday noon had (1) met with Tuesday noon had (1) met with the faculty, (2) brought two members of her order in to work on lists of school needs while she and the faculty discuss the academic program; (3) met with Dr. Charles Huchet, director of special services for the Princeton Regional School System and had made a date for a talk with Mrs. Mitdred Kaplan of the Regnonal School health department, both to explore meeting St. Paul's needs for a school nurse, a psychologist and possibly a speech therapist. She comes to Princeton after serving as founding principal of St. Matthias School in Somerset for six years. There has been an intervening year spent teaching upper grade math alloly Cross in Rumson, in accordance with the Sisters of Mercy policy of giving its pricipals a change of pace.

That's the "why" of a Fed-erally-financed summer lan-guage and reading program just concluded at John Witherjust concluded at John Witherspoon School. For four weeks, 33 educationally disadvantaged kids about to enter kindergarden, first or second grades spent live mornings a week smoothing out their approach to the difficulties of reading the English language.

Afternoons, the teachers would sit down and discuss each child and talk over the malerials that individual child might need. Frances Stonaker, originator and director of the argers regularly went from a control of the stone of

A splendid wealth of advanced educational materials provided additional support for the teachers.

"We found that the most common area of weakness kids have is auditory discrimination," Mrs. Stonaker explains. It's hard for many children to hear the difference between "clothe" and "clove," "pen" and "pin", "pat" and "pet. And if you cant hear the difference, how can you read it

"Some children can only start with two or three itens in this game," Mrs. Stonaker says. For these boys and groups in which kids would talk and they have, and eventually they can repeat quite a list."

It's hard for some children to understand concepts, Mrs. Stonaker says. For these boys and grade before we think he's ready to start learning to read, it's important in which kids would talk and teachers would listen. A child might know the word "apple" or "pear", for example, but have no idea of the concept of to link a sound and a symbol "Irnit."

There are handsone knit gants in a black-white-s and longer this year, keyed to the current fashion of platform shoes. They come in solid knits, too, in classic herringbone wools.

Shirt-jackets, casual and classic, also include lumber-jack plaids in great colors, houndstooth checks. There's the traditional camel blazer, with a neatly different touch to the pockets.

with a neatly different touch to the pockets.

For the girl with the one hundred percent perfect figure, Ladybug is showing a striking, but simple outfit of sand-toned lambswood-and-an g or a. The long, elingy top buttons down the front and is edged in chocolate; the pants are wide.

We saw some charming smock tops; short-sleeved sweater-vests of muhair in romantic colors; checked jackets with velvet lapels and matched pants and long skirts. Here and there a playful touch, like Mickey Mouse outlined in slipped stitched on a dolman sleeved sweater.

Piecadilly has the young look with its swings kilts, enfetd pants, double-knit blazers and long cordoroy skirts in withouse prints.

Tailored polyvester knit shirts are basic, figure-charging, casy to wash, tabout $11) Wear yours with a kilt skirt. Iringed down the side and hely wing found the wing found herself a carrier. Up to You has kils of skirts with a brass safety pin ($18).

Sweater sets; cable stiten.

For Nimble

Pants are super fit, with a nice flare, well tailored and not hippie. Tops and blazers key in for the coordinate look. Among the coats, synthetic fur trim for the ecology minded; pure lab, "sheepskin" touches on storm coats at hem, collar and sleeve. Another, shorter, in blue, uses white fake for to give the look of a vest.

And of course, the season's favorite, the wrap coal, untrimmed, tied with a long beit. The length is well above the knee, perfect for slacks, and there's a good choice of color. Coat prices are around $45 to $65 or se $65 or so.

He generally views zoning problems, e.g., uncontrolled parking and hazardous traffic conditions, in terms of the conditions be encounters — after the particular zoning action is an accomplished fact.

On the other hand, the professionals, who draw up the ordinances a n d who serve clients with zoning problems, obviously have a different point of view. The public's interest in zoning will be frustrated if the scene, the Botter decision statics as the conditions, who trave the impact of variances on the committee must be more responsive to inquirie about zoning related problems (see below). Reluctance to do this will only recofforce the impression that special in terests do indeed dominate the scene.

Judge Botter believes New Jersey is not doing enough to equalize educational opportunity in poorer school districts. He therefore decreed that the minimum-aid funds be distributed under some new procedure which has yet to be de-

How Do You Pronounce "Tennis Shoes" If You Are Japanese?

If you've been stopped on Nassau Street by an eager, friendly Japanese and asked—well, it could be anything: "Are you a teacher?" "Where can I buy a loaf of bread?" "Please tell me about Princeton children," then you know already that Princeton has been host for the past four weeks to 39 teachers who teach English in the public schools of Japan.

The teachers, 33 men and six women, are spending seven weeks in the United States under the auspices of the Council on International Education,

Since July 29, they've been at the University, listering and speaking, listening and speaking, always with the idea of sharpening and deepening their command and comprehension of spoken English.

The Office of Teacher Preparation at the University, under Henry Drewry, is in charge of the program, and Donald Blankenbush, social studies teacher at Princeton High, is the assistant.

School Days. The three mor school Bays. The three morning hours are occupied each day with classroom work under the specialized guidance of three "TESOL" (Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages) teachers from York

Formality and the wish never to offend—often re-garded by Americans as stereotypes of the Japanese character—were most in evidence during home visits of the Japanese teachers.

One guest beat his nost—thoroughly!—in badminton, but inexplicably "lost" to a neighbor much less skillful in the game than the host. Another Japanese said to the host, "It was a compliment: he feit he knew you well enough to beat you!"

Japanese enjoyed most the children in host families.

Their TESOL teachers have sent them out on errands.

Family Life, Japanese-Style Listening, relaxed, to the chatter of children relieved the constant strain of think-ing and speaking in an alien

The visitors were astonished at the amount of play-space Princeton children have—a neighbor's lawn to run across as though it were your own! In Japan every bit of yard space is either a vegetable garden or a tiny formal adult garden.

"We have no such space for children to play," said one teacher.

LET'S TALK ABOUT TEACHING: Doris Peskin (center) teaches English at Princeton High to students who are not native to the language. One evening recently she chatted with a group of Japanese teachers who also teach English as a foreign language. The language of their discussion? English, of course.

The teachers work at the middle school and high school level in Japan and most of them have taught English for manity of Princeton serves as a kind of classroom. Early in their stay, the teachers explored Princeton. They found out where the post office is. They discovered Cox' store, Woolworth's and what they call "The P.U. Store."

They rentured north of Nassau and found the public library. They nosed out the liquor stores — almost all the teachers are devotees of Scotch—and they will tell you that each liquor store has its own particular personality.

Their TESOL teachers have

So the University has brought community representatives to talk with the Japanese visitors. Princeton Borough police, Superintendent of Schools Philip E. McPherson, various school principals, teachers in the school system have sat informally in small groups with the visiting teachers, talking and answering.

Princeton police, for example, learned that the crime problems in Tokyo aren't too different from the problems from Princeton's schools heard Japanese here. Teachers from Prince-ton's schools heard Japanese say philosophically that, well, some students were bored and students generally were hard-er to teach than they used to be.

During their campus stay, the Japanese have been living in 1938 Hall and for some time they were cordial neighbors of the young black men who were on campus for the Princeton Co-operative School program.

These youths were sophomores or juniors in inner-city schools about the same age as students back home in Japan.
The two groups had a line

seal. "Not time on the athletic fields: the Japanese beat the black team in baseball, and the blacks difference turned around and creamed the Japanese in volleyball.

Racial problems interest the teachers keenly. How are race relations in Princeton? they ask repeatedly.
 Perspective and intelligent, the Japanese saw at once that Princeton is not a typical American city.
 "You are rich and bettereducated," one teacher observed.

They asked Mr. Blankenbush to seek out Princeton residents from the lower economic brackets. They want to talk with more black Princeton residents. "So many middleclass!" they smile.

Schools are so different

They have little room for change or innovation in teaching, nor are they free to select their own texts. They steer their students on a straight and narrow path toward the extremely difficult entrance examinations to Japanese universities. Students themselves all wear uniforms, reflecting the rigidity of the system. the rigidity of the system.

When Princeton's school-teachers sat around informally with their Japanese counterparts one recent evening, the talk turned to unions.

Yes, teachers have them in Japan, and they are very strong. One teacher is representative of his high-school in the union. Classes are suspended so that teachers can attend union meetings. attend union meetings.

Good-Bye! The Princeton stay will end this Saturday. Teachers will start on a bustour of the south that will end in Houston.
For two weeks, the teachers will observe classes and teaching in the Houston public school system. Then it's on to San Francisco for a holiday, and home.

Houston brings a shudder of apprehension to the 39 teachers. English is difficult enough to understand when it's spoken by an odd-lol assortment of New Jerseyites from various backgrounds.

Language Barriers Conquered for Foreign-Born

No Melting Pot. The melting pot theory used to be the underpinning of school for the foreign born. Children were melted down into English, the speaking kids who celebrated Hallowe'en rather than the Feast of Lanterns or the Schute to the Sun.

The Rising Generation

Learning Self-Discipline

by Edward C. Kopp, III, a Director of Princeton Youth Baseball Association

Baseball. A ckinny little kid goes up to the plate. He clutches his bat, waits for the pitch. His teammates yell to him that the pitcher's no good. He hears his coach shout, "You can do it!" And from the outfield come the chants, "He's no hitter!" Then the pitch comes—and his mother can't hit it for him, and his father can't hit it for him. His teacher, or his big brother, can't bail him out. He's on his own.

He's on his way to learning what I've seen hundreds of Princeton boys learn: how to work hard and to handle the breaks of the game. He'll have hits and strikes and walks to first base at one time or another throughout his lile. In many ways, youth baseball is a microcosm of the adult world.

We have this year ahout 260 to 270 boys involved in the three levels of youth baseball; Little League, Babe Ruth League and American Legion (which is probably the highest level of amateur ball for boys today.)

I've found that this year particularly—our first year of Legion ball—that learning self-discipline is the absolute core of a successful team effort. Some might argue on the basis of our record of only seven wins this year, but no one who has followed this team can fail to be impressed by the overall effort there young men have made and how well they have responded to a very disciplined regime.

Ninety percent of them were on the high school squad, but our philosophy is a more structured discipline. I leet very strongly that the program is as important in trug deterence as any we have. These young men have a place to go and a sense of purpose.

The camaraderie of the dugout is a marvelous thing to watch. They like each other. They can be very critical of themselves and of others—but it is a nice sort of criticism. The way it is said may be hersh on the surface, but when you observe how well they get along together, you know that it basn't been meant or taken as mean criticism.

Wo've organized our Little League's eight teams to encourage maximum participation of all the younger boys who want to play ball. It isn't always 100 percent successful in terms of the mechanics, but the idea is sound and has been widely accepted by the boys who parlicipate.

Then, at the second level of baseball, for boys 12 to 15, we refine this. All the young men who try out for Babe Ruth ball tend to be those with baseball ability. We don't guarantee that they will actively play in all the games. We demand regular attendance at practice, full concentration, 100 percent participation in every form of drill, and behavioral patterns, such as remaining in one place throughout the game.

By the time they are in the Babe Ruth League, these young men will have learned a great degree of self-discipline. They're proud of their accomplishments, willing to work hard, and pleased when they are recognized.

They accept constructive criticism and are mature arough to overlook the flare-up that can accompany a mistake. They recognize the limitations of their own abilities. They believe they can improve on their God-given talents while they're waiting to make the regular team.

The Princeton community sports programs cross all racial, ethnic and economic lines. We keep looking for more participation from the black community—particutarly the fathers. Some of them have played on championship soliball teams. We feel they could add a lot to this type of program.

And a word about "winning": I might not go along with the Lombardi philosophy that winning is the ONLY thing. And I have never run into a coach whose primary concern was not the welfare of the young people. But winning its a very important part of the program, just as it is to any adult in any facet of life.

For instance, the Roma Elerna team, which is coached by Craig Wood, won the championship this year. A few years ago they were barely able to win a game! Essentially, this year's champions are the same group ol boys, a liltle more experienced, working with the same coach. Winning came from a growth in team spirit and long hours of practice.

They earned their honors-

Defense Must Develop Quickly to Keep Tigers Out of Big Trouble

If Princeton's 1972 football team is not to be swept over the dam while its offense, particularly the backfield, is undergoing almost total reconstruction, it will be up to the defensive platoon to close the floodgates. So heavy have been the manpower losses from last year's attacking unit that the Tigers cannot hope to score much in their first three or four games.

much in their first three or four games.

It will, accordingly, he up to the defense to control the opposition with some degree of authority. Nothing that will confront Princeton in the early games against Rutgers, Columbia and Dartmouth is likely to make this task easy particularly since seven of last year's starters on defense graduated and an eighth became an academic casualty.
